

Anna Sui
Fall 2016

DOE EYES

You've mastered mascara. Maybe you've even played around with some individual clusters of falsies. The time has come, young Jedi, to use the Force on your lashes.

Stack two strips of fake lashes. We're not joking: These are high-stakes lashes, people. Now glue them together.

While they dry, trace your upper lash line with pencil eyeliner, as McGrath did at Anna Sui (left). If you aren't so good at lashes, the eyeliner can act as a base and make it so you don't see the gap between the strip and your own lashes. Curl your lashes and sweep on a coat of volumizing mascara.

Now place your stacked creation. Be sure to line up the falsies with the outer corner of your eye, and wait at least five minutes for all the glue to dry.

COLD COMFORT

These potions are the cardigans and thermals of your skin-care wardrobe—layer them correctly and you're in for one very cozy and glow-y season.

1 Start with an essence—the thinnest product—to moisturize and prep skin for all other ingredients.

Follow with a serum that treats your primary skin concern. This peptide formula firms and smooths.

3 Everyone can benefit from vitamin C; it brightens, protects, and promotes collagen production.

6 Sunscreen is your final step, even on gray days. This one is lightweight enough to layer over other products.

A rich cream seals in all that good stuff and helps plump up fine lines.

As a rule, oils can penetrate creams, but not vice versa. Add to dry spots as needed.

5

Clockwise from top: SK-II Facial Treatment Essence, Olay Regenerist Micro-Sculpting Serum, Perricone MD Vitamin C Ester Serum, L'Oréal Paris RevitaLift Triple Power Deep-Acting Moisturizer, Rodin Olio Lusso Lavender Absolute Luxury Face Oil, and EltaMD UV Clear Broad-Spectrum SPF 46.

LET ME TELL YOU

"I use avocado oil to take off my fake lashes. I'll just put it on my fingertips and rub it around. I try to be gentle with my eyes, so I don't like to pull off lashes—I think it also pulls off my own. I sleep in avocado oil, too. It helps with the laugh lines and just nourishes my eyes."

—Khloé
Kardashian

La Tourangelle
Avocado Oil